□ "Mustering at Mount Augustus Station"

Ray, Kay and staff welcome you to your outback holiday

At one of the world's most spectacular peaks Mount Augustus towers 2,354 ft. above the surrounding plain and is 3,627 ft. above sea level. This mighty monocline appearing like a giant ant hill is visible from the air for more than a hundred miles, and has long been a landmark for travellers, both by air and land.

The Mountain was first ascended on 3rd June, 1858, by F.T. Gregory. The Mountain is the culminating point of a long and broad ridge about five miles in length. The upper portion of the north face is an almost vertical escarpment.

The Strata lie unconformably on granitic rocks which formed the floor of the sea on which the sand and boulders were deposited. This granitic rock which lies under the rocks of Mount Augustus is 1650 million years old.

Mount Augustus is more than twice the size of Ayers Rock and a completely different shape. Possibly at first sight its appearance is not quite so dramatic but it has a mystique and splendour which has led some visitors to refer to it as a "magic" mountain. It constantly changes colour from bright red at sunrise through shades of green, to hues of blue then through orange to gold at sunset.

Mount Augustus is fast becoming a mecca not only for overseas visitors but also for geologists, botanists, ornithologists, cavers, climbers, hikers and nature lovers in general.
