

TREATMENT OF WATERFOWL

The Department has prepared a booklet outlining the treatment of waterfowl affected by either Algal poisoning or Botulism. Cases of these two sicknesses are likely to occur throughout the State at any time of the year, and frequently do, causing heavy mortality among the waterfowl. Large outbreaks, however, usually develop in the South-west only during the summer months. When they do, a considerable number of birds is affected and the Department is unable to cope. The booklet has been prepared as a guide for anyone willing to care for and treat afflicted birds.

Booklets are available from Head Office on application.
