

Harold Burnett handling a well above average size cray or "Rock Lobster", as the wooden slat type pot which is the most commonly used type, especially in shallower waters of steel weight bolted to the bottom. The more expensive types have a steel "grill" to facilitate re-baiting etc.